Richard Estes (b. 1932) is an American painter best known for his hyperrealistic paintings depicting urban landscapes. Estes is regarded as one of the founders of the Photo-Realist movement which emerged in the late 1960s. In the early 1970s Estes turned his attention to silkscreen prints, pushing this medium to an extreme. The spatially complex urban images are an accumulation of many layers of color, sometimes up to a few hundred. His prints capture a palette and vitality similar to the detailed clarity of his paintings.

Estes's work can be found in public and private collections including the Art Institute of Chicago, Illinois; the Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden, Washington, D.C.; the Museum of Modern Art, New York; the Neue Galerie der Stadt Aachen, Ludwig Collection, Germany; the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum, New York; the Teheran Museum of Contemporary Art, Iran; and the Whitney Museum of American Art, New York.
